

recitation by Comrade Vissoher who, being heartily recalled, gave another. The company then marched out of the building headed by the band, and went over to the old Archer hose house where a plentiful supper of "hard-tack," baked beans, ham, coffee, etc., had been spread, and the crowd did the layout ample justice, a large party remaining until after midnight, during all of which time the band in attendance enlivened at intervals with choice selections. The members of the post are delighted with the success of their first entertainment and all who participated will long remember it as an exceedingly pleasant occasion.

They Are Pushing Things.

Things are booming in North Denver. Everybody is awake and deeply interested in the great work. Dr. Buchtel is pushing his improvements on the Barnum property with judgment and determination. The splendid avenues winding their way through the vast area of land are rapidly approaching completion. A large number of men and teams are crowding this work to a termination. The reservoir, located on the premises and covering seven acres, with a capacity of 3,000 inches of water for irrigating purposes, will soon be in readiness.

The doctor advertises to-day for proposals for the construction of two artesian wells, one with capacity of eight inches to be erected in the vicinity of the reservoir, the other with capacity of four inches to be sunk near the hotel. These artesian wells will supply the hotel and all living in the vicinity with pure water for drinking and cooking purposes.

We say "hotel," in referring to the Mansion, for such was its recent character. The doctor appreciates the peculiar advantages of the location, and he is preparing this property as rapidly as possible for the reception of guests, under new and competent management.

Work will soon be commenced upon the dam. There will be a lake covering ten acres, with boating and bathing facilities. Also fish-ponds well stocked.

The surrounding property owners are strongly in favor of a bridge across Dry
